Jess' Story

Jess found Egg Donor Solutions from an ad at her college. She was about to graduate with a teaching degree and needed to pay her school loans. While at first she found egg donation daunting, Jess wanted to help a couple start a family.

Applying is Easy

She applied online and met with her care coordinator, Holly, who happily answered all of her questions. After two weeks, she received a call: Jess was chosen to be a donor.

"I was a 'big' in the big brother/big sister program and loved it! Knowing there are some couples unable to solely produce or carry on their own, I really felt it placed on my heart to donate."

Medical Simplicity

She met with a physician and therapist who made sure she was perfectly healthy. Then she started taking fertility hormones and new birth control to sync her cycle with the intended mother.

The fertility self-injections concerned her at first, but her physician showed her that they really were simple. The intended mother also went through a similar process, taking estrogen to prepare herself for the eggs.

Dedication with No Expense

Jess loved that Holly kept in contact with her throughout the process and that the intended parents paid for her egg donation bills.

Quick Recovery

When the day came, Jess and a travel companion went to have Jess' eggs retrieved. The procedure was quick, and after a day of rest and a movie marathon, she was back to her usual activities.

Compensation Check

Jess was thrilled that the pregnancy took, but was also excited to receive a compensation check from the intended parents. She paid her school loans to be debt-free when she chose to start her own family. Currently, Jess looks forward to starting the process again with another family.

"I imagined going through the frustration and even heart break that the couples might go through. It strengthened my dedication and excitement to the egg donor program."

How do I become an Egg Donor?
